ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

In the present era, libraries and library professionals are operating in a rapidly changing environment, largely influenced by the development of artificial intelligence. These developments bring both new opportunities and challenges for libraries and information centres in delivering services. Libraries are redefining themselves to offer new services as AI increasingly manages how information is stored and accessed. In this age of intelligence, libraries are moving towards more learner-oriented, technology-driven models. The growing use of advanced technologies such as AI, data science, robotics, and data analytics is significantly influencing teaching and learning. These changes enable learners to study more conveniently using online materials, learning platforms, and hybrid and virtual learning methods. As a result, librarians are no longer just information providers but are increasingly taking on the role of facilitators and guides.
